ALL INDIA POLITICAL PARTY MEET [AIPPM]

It was established for Indian politicians to do public debates, discussions, and deliberation free from the Parliament of India, the Lok Sabha House of the People, or "legislative functions of the parliament. "Moving over from a one-party dominance of the Indian National Congress in the initial days after India became a democratic country to two-party, multi-party, and finally, coalition politics, the politics of India has been gradually evolving. The AIPPM (All India Political Parties Meet) is a platform where all deserving Indian politicians unite to debate or make decisions on issues of national importance. In India, AIPPM is an undertaking to simulate political realities by stimulating many Indian policies and governance at different levels. Participants are allotted specific political parties. Politicians must be well-versed in their political party's ideology, manifesto, and beliefs. Although all Parliamentary committee reports are accepted as accurate reports, reports issued by the Indian government and all its organs can be considered authentic. However, only English and Hindi have been allowed till now.

CONTINOUS CRISIS COMMITTEE [CCC]

A crisis committee is a decision-making body with more power than a traditional committee. While General Assemblies recommend and build consensus, focusing on creating and refining frameworks for the national party to align their actions, crisis committees produce action. The delegates of this committee have more scope for imagination. Groups that look like this are any small group with political power. The crisis is also more dynamic and fast-paced than traditional committees, so each delegate is incredibly influential, and all delegates get equal representation.
